

A high tech demo is often a proof-of-concept to showcase specific software. It can be used as a trial version for customers, in advertising, or as a sample of the digital product for someone who is interested. Based on the objective and the target audience, the demo may be customized. Usually, the design team joins the development team to help shape how the demo will be later introduced, either as a website, a video, or even an email.

A well-done demo is meant to highlight the product and provide a clear experience of what the end result will deliver. It shows the story behind the product, helping to show the product's potential and answer any questions.

Benefits to Your Organization

- The demo is a customized story, not a tour. It exhibits your product's functional and technical capabilities.
- It seeks to help visualize the impact of the product through an "in-product" experience.
- Main targets after all demos are to both prioritize and adapt to the customer's needs. They shape and guarantee the message is heard clearly and powerfully.
- Its many formats give the desired access as it can be a free-trial or an overview of its main features.

Goals and Outcomes

- Explain the problem
- Effectively stress 'why' the product solves that problem
- Contrast the solution with an apparent alternative
- Highlight its features over others
- Deliver a walk through the code and main features
- Offer statistics and workflows
- Present sample images of the product
- May grant access to a free-trial experience
- Allow the customer to inspect the product

We Can Build It
